The founders of Riot tried to develop an independent game of the same kind. Since its release in October 2009, the game has been free of charge and is monetized through character customization. The game is available for Microsoft Windows and macOS. In the game, two teams of five players fight against players, each team occupying and defends their half of the map. Each of the ten players controls a character, known as "champion", with unique abilities and different game styles. During a game, the champions become more powerful by collecting experience points, earning gold and buying items to defeat the opponents' team. In the main mode of the game, the Summoner Rift, a team wins by pushing through the enemy base and destroying the "Nexus", a large structure located inside. League of Legends received generally positive reviews; critics highlighted the game's accessibility, character drawings and graphics and production value. The long duration of the game led to its players, criticized since the beginning of the game's life, persists despite Riot's attempts to solve them 2019, the game regularly reaches eight million players simultaneously, and its popularity led to tie-ins such as music videos, comics, tales and animated series. Its success has also generated several spin-off games, including a mobile version and a digital collectible card game. A hugely based online multiplayer role game based on the property is developing. The game is, often referred to as the world's largest sport, with an international competitive scene of 12 leagues. The national championships culminate in the annual League of Legends World Championship. The 2019 championship had over 100 million unique spectators, reaching a concurrent of 44 million. National and international events have been broadcast on livestreaming websites such as Twitch, YouTube, Bilibili, as well as ESPN cable television sports channel. League of Legends is an online multiplayer game arena battle (MOBA) where the players controls a character (champion) with a unique set of skills from an isometric perspective. [314] From April 2021[update], there are 165 samples available to play. [6] During a game, the champions earn levels by accruing points via experience (XP) through killing monsters. [7] and are bought in a gold, which players grow passively over time to earn actively defeating the opponent's minions. [3] champions, or defensive structures. [617] In the main game mode, the Summoner Rift, the items are purchased through a store menu that is only available to players when their sample is on the base of the team. [3] Each game is discreet, levels and elements do not move from one game to another. [8] Switch Rift A simplified representation of the Summoner Rift. The yellow paths are the narrow streets-the minions; the blue and red dots represent the turrets. The fountains are the dark areas within each base, and are next to each Nexus. The black dotted line indicates the river. The switch Rift isLeague of Legends point game modes and the most prominent in the professional level game. [91][10][11] The mode has a competitive scale classified; a matchmaking system determines the player's skill level and generates a starting degree from which they can climb. There are nine levels; the least experienced are iron, bronze and silver, and the highest are the Master, the Grand Master and the Challenger[12][a] Two teams of five players compete to destroy the opposing team "Nexus", which is guarded by enemy champions and defensive structures known as "turrets". [14] Each Nexus team is on their base, where players start the game or reappear after death. [14] The non-player characters known as minion are generated by the Nexus of each team and the enemy base along three lanes guarded by turrets: top, middle and bottom. [15] Each team base contains three "inhibitors", one behind the third tower from the center of each lane. Destroying one of the enemy's inhibitors causes stronger allied minions to dispose in that lane, and allows the attacking team to damage the enemy Nexus and the two turrets that guard him. [16] The regions among the alleys are collectively known as the "jank", which is inhabited by "monsters", like the minions, are collected at regular intervals. Like minions, monsters provide gold and XP when killed. [17] Another, more powerful monster class lies within the river separating the jungle of each team. [18] These monsters require more players to defeat and grant special abilities to their slayers team. For example, teams can get a powerful ally unit after killing the Rift Herald, increases the permanent force by killing dragons, and stronger, more durable minions by killing Baron Nashor. [19] Revoking Rift games can last from less than 15 minutes to more than an hour. [20] Even if theodas not enforce where players can go, conventions have arisen during the life of the game: typically a player goes in the upper lane, in the central, central lane, and two in the lower lane. [21] Players in a lane kill minions to accumulate gold and XP (termed "farming") and to prevent their opponent from doing the same. A fifth champion, known as "jungler", updates the jungle monsters and, when powerful enough, assists their teammates. [22] Other modes include Summoner's Rift, League of legends has two more permanent game modes. ARAM "All Random, All Mid" is a five against five mode like Summoner's Rift, but with only one long lane, no jungle zone, and with randomly chosen champions. [23][24] Given the small size of the map, players must be vigilant to avoid enemy skills. [25] Teamfight Tactics is a battler card released in June 2019 and made a permanent game mode the following month. [26] As with others in its kind, players build a team and battle to the last standing. Players do not directly engage the fight, but place their units on a board for them to automatically fight against opponents each turn. [28] Teamfight Tactics is available for iOS and Android and has cross-platform play with Windows and macOS editions. [29] Other game modes were made available temporarily, typically aligning with in-game events. [30][31] The Ultra Rapid Fire (URF) mode was available for two weeks as a 2014 April Fools Day joke. In mode, sample skills have no resource costs, significantly reduced cooling times, increased movement speed, reduced healing and faster attacks.[32][33] A year later, in April 2015, Riot revealed that they had not reported the URF mode to the Federal Trade Commission. [34] The game's developer, Riot Games, said that the removal of random-based skills made the game more competitive for all member states, but less than Dota sequel, blitz.
